

How to achieve the highest level of business networking?

Two days full of networking and 4000 1:1 meetings with startups, investors, executives and developers are about to disrupt the tech community in Europe and beyond again. The fourth edition of Wolves Summit, an international conference focused on innovations in technology, is taking place on 25-26th October 2016 in Warsaw, Poland.

The Polish disruption

2500 participants will gather in the capital of Poland to discuss and exchange knowledge about startup and business ecosystems. It seems to be the ideal spot for that, since the Polish tech community has grown significantly over the past few years. The proof lies in numerous startup hubs, incubators and events like Wolves Summit. The conference welcomes its 4th edition stronger than ever with 250 investors, 300 executives and 350 startups on board.

A day for investors and startups

Startups and investors are given an additional day (24th October) to network and participate in the Great Pitch qualifications. It's a competition for aspiring startups where, depending on their stages of development, they can win $100 000 in cash and investment or a media package. Investors will also have the chance to meet each other during networking activities set up to exchange experiences and good practices in a circle of investing experts.

Research and development

One of the innovations introduced to Wolves Summit is a separate day for representatives of science, higher education and business communities. They will all meet on 27th October at Wolves Summit R&D to exchange views on implementing innovation into Polish business. The debate will cover such topics as technology transfer, research infrastructure, the acceleration of companies' global development and more.

Here to inspire

Wolves Summit is a great source of relevant knowledge on technology and startups. World's best speakers and professionals present at the conference in October include Tim Draper, Per Schlingmann, Berg Moe, Richard Lorenzen and many more. With 3 stages for startups, business growth and developers available everyone will find inspiration for further education and development.

Match and meet

Networking at Wolves Summit is at a remarkably high level with 1:1 meetings, a matchmaking tool and evening events. Organizers are also providing free networking areas, where attendees can meet and initiate business relations. Matchmaking enables participants to set up meetings with specific people before the conference even begins. This way they can fill their calendars and make the most out of their time at Wolves.

Speed dating

The idea of speed dates has been transferred to Wolves Summit. Startups, corporations and investors can meet in person and talk business for 15 minutes before switching to another person. It makes networking more efficient and less time-consuming. What's more, the amount of business cards a participant can collect, may result in actual long-term relationships and acquiring new clients.

Not stopping there

The conference is going to gather 2500 attendees from more than 50 countries who operate in 40 different sectors. It's a place for developing business relations, finding clients and exploring new investment opportunities.
